Chalbam, Rhode-Hand Harbsur, Dec. 130-1764-1.

THE commanders in chief in America having thought proper, while the teaton would admit of lightly elipsoy a confiderable number of his majety. It thinks and proper for the purpose of making elsernts on the colony of Rhode-Hand, and lord Howe having done the horiour to appoint me to the command by least flord Shuldham having leave to return to England by (lord Shuldham having leave to return to England by the most early conveyance) Is directed commodors instituted, and the line in which it ought to operate. We have in this city a strange variety of men and characters, and the circumstances of the times require they should be publicly known; it is not the number of torne that hurt us, fo niuch as the not finding out who they are; men must now take one side or the other, and shide by the consequences i' The quakers, trusting to their short fighted sagacity, have, most unluckily for them, made their declaration in their last testimony, and we ought now to take them at their word. They have voluntarily read themselves out of the Continental Meeting, and cannot hope to be restored to it again, but by payment and penitence. Men whose positical principles are founded on avarice, are beyond the reach of reason, and the only cure for toryism of this call is to tax it. A substantial good, drawn from a real evil, it of the same benefit to society as if drawn from a virthe ; and where men have not public spirit to render themselves terviceable, it ought to be the fludy of government to draw the best use possible from their vices. When the governing passion of any man, or let of men, Honce known, the method of managing them is easy; would become generous, could heavy tax be laid upon coverquinele

The tories have endeavoured to infure their property with the enemy, by forfeiting their reputation with us; from which may be juffly inferred, that their governing pation is avarile. Make them as much alraid of loling on one fide as the other, and you flagger their toryim; monant amount is the metalling is the more spoled thereby and whatever injury their estates may suitain by the movements of the enemy, must either be borne by themseives, who have done every thing which have yet been done, or by the tories, who have not only done nothing, but have, by their disaffection, invited the enemy on.

In the present crisis we ought to know, square by fourre, and house by house, who are in real allegiance with the United independent States, and who are not. Let but the line be made clear and distinct; and all men' will then know what they are to trustito. It would not only be good policy, but kriet judice, to raife fifty or an hundred thousand pounds, or more, oif it us 'necessary, out of the estates and property of the king of angland's votaries, resident in Philadelphia, to be distributed as'a reward to those inhabitants of the city and state, who shall turn out and repulse the enemy, should they at-tempt their march this way; and like wife; to bind the property of all such persons to make good the damages which that of the whige might sustain. In the undistinguishable mode of conducting a war, we frequently make reprisals at sea, on the yesself of persons in England who are friends to our came, compared with the residentiary tories among us;

In every former publication of mine, from Common Sense down to the last Cross, I have generally gone on the charitable supposition, that the tories-were rather 2 millaken than an riminal people, and have applied argument after argument with all the candour and the miper. I was capable of, in order to let every part of the cald, clearly and fairly before them, and if possible; to reclaim them from ruin to reason. I have done my duty own, the tame distance from Bladenburg. rom Baltimore, and about to from Frederick-The farm is in good order, fencing chiefly, the fields laid off in such a manner as to be venient for passurage of flock, whereon is a ing orchard just getting into prime, a con-letting-house, kitchen, barn, &c. about one larges of faid land is well fituated for meadow, which is already cleared and in grats.
